The Sweet Tooth Vindicated.

Sweetness is to the taste what beauty is to the eye, affirms Dr. Woods Hutchinson—Nature's stamp of approval and vindication of wholesomeness. Sugar says this authority, is one of the most universal flavors of foodstuff known. One-half of our real food taste sweet or sweetish—that is, they contain sugar in some form. About one-third taste salty; not more than one-tenth taste either bitter or sour. The experience of millions of years, reaching far beyond even our arboreal ancestors, has taught us beyond possibility of forgetting that, while there are hundreds of things that taste salty which have no food value and scores of things that taste bitter that not only have no food value, but are even poisonous; and thousands of things, like leaves and sawdust and cocoanut matting, which have no food value at all until advertised as breakfast foods, there are comparatively few things that taste sweet which are not real foods. A very few of these sweet-tasting things, while real foods, are also poisonous, but these we soon learn to detect and beware of.—Current Literature.

Whitewashing the Coal.

Persons who have been laying in their supply of coal for the winter months may have noticed that many of the lumps were coated with white-wash, and they doubtless wondered what was the reason for the unique decoration. Although the white color may be considered to have improved the appearance of the ordinary black coal, that was not the object in view. For many years the railroads have been annoyed by coal thieves, and thousands of tons of fuel were stolen annually. As the great carloads, containing 40 tons each, are being carried from the mines, it is very easy for unscrupulous persons to remove a ton or two from a car without causing any noticeable change in the appearance of the load. Only when the car is again put on the scales is the loss detected, and then it is too late to trace the guilty parties.

To check these depredations the railroad men have adopted the white-wash method of safeguarding their freight.

After a car has been loaded a solution of lime and water is sprayed over the coal, and when the water has evaporated a white coating of lime remains on the top layer of lumps. Then, if any of the coal is removed, a black patch will be left upon the white surface to attract the attention of inspectors and station agents before the train has gone many miles from the scene of the theft, and thus the offender is easily traced.—Harpers Weekly.

A Blind Judge.

The death of E. F. P. Emmett, president of the Burnely Incorporated Law Society, one of the two blind solicitors in England, may recall the fact that in Ireland a judge of the superior court discharged his judicial duties for years when totally blind. The Hon. Richard Pennefather was appointed a baro of the Irish exchequer in 1821, and died in 1859 while still retaining his judicial office. He was for the last five years of his life wholly blind, and on February 15, 1856, in the discussion in the house of commons of a motion of Sir John Shelley's moving for a return of the dates of call to the bar of the various Irish judges, their appointments as Irish judges, their appointments as judges, and the number of occasions on which they were absent from circuit, Baron Pennefather's retention of his seat on the bench, notwithstanding the deprivation of his sight, was a matter of stricture.—Law Times.

Victor Hugo's Superstition.

An amusing story of Victor Hugo is related in a French contemporary. The poet had accepted an invitation to dine at the house of one of those ardent republicans who at the time were wittily termed "less precise radicals."

The dinner hour had passed some time without any announcement that the dinner was served, when one of the company, a friend of Victor Hugo, inquired of the hostess the cause of the delay. The latter explained that owing to one of the guests having sent an excuse at the last moment there would be thirteen at the table, so she had sent to find another to make the fourteenth.

A moment later the same individual was conversing with Victor Hugo. "Do you know why we are waiting?" asked the poet. "Yes," was the reply: "some imbecile is afraid to sit at the table when there are thirteen." Victor Hugo, in a solemn and severe tone, replied, "Imbecile 'est mort"—Londo Globe.

AUGUSTA CLAIMS PRESIDENT AS SON

Charleston to Columbia this morning.

Tillman Declines Invitation.

Senator Tillman, however, disappeared as soon as the party alighted at the State capitol. He had been in a controversy with those in charge of the luncheon arrangements and had declined an invitation which carried with it an assessment for $10. Senator Tillman said he thought it a poor example of South Carolina hospitality and thought the city ought to bear the expense of all invited guests.

In his speech at the State capitol, President Taft said:

"My friends, I am not inspired to say much today because I feel so much more than I can say. There's something about South Carolina and her traditions as I look into the faces of her great men, and think what she has done and the part she has played in all the great historical crises of this country, that makes me take this reception from you with a feeling that I am honored far beyond my deserts."

Because He Represents Country.

"I realize that it is because I represent the whole nation for the time being and that you in your loyalty to the flag and country and with the hospitality for which your state is noted, express to me the feeling that rises in each of your hearts as you think of your country and as you think of the patriotism of yourselves and the state. I come to Columbia and look out from the steps of the State capitol and see a city that has arisen since the Civil war—not a city that did not exist before the Civil war, but a city that by its growth and its energy and its taking on life shows that while that Civil war brought to it an evidence of the tremendous strength, the tremendous power of self-sacrifice of its people, it did not destroy their hope for the future or their willingness again to become a part of the great Union and to make that Union stronger and that country a nation greater than ever before in its history."

"And now, my friends, I am going to stop, this is the 251st speech I have made, but in no one of them have I felt so much satisfaction in expressing the truth as I know it."

Link Between States.

In his fair grounds speech at Columbia, President Taft after referring to the fact that South Carolina as a cotton manufacturing state is now taking rank with Massachusetts. He said:

"Linked in a remarkable way with another state in the far north, Massachusetts, while they are distant from each other, they have played parts together and apart in such a way that they are singled out from all the other states as a pair. And when you hear a Massachusetts man say that he comes from the greatest state in the Union, you sympathize with him; and when you hear a South Carolinian say the same thing you sympathize with him, and you understand both."

"Now this is an agricultural society. Unfortunately I am an urban product. I never could get votes by telling how I drove the plow, but one must be blind indeed to the progress of this country and to the proper understanding of real advance in civilization and in the arts of peace, who does not realize the supreme importance of agriculture and the immense strides that have taken place in its cultivation throughout this country during the last two decades. Such organizations as these make for progress."

Farmer Must Be Scientific.

"A farmer today needs to know as much as a lawyer or a doctor or a minister in the way of scientific knowledge of the soils and how they are to be treated, and of stock and breeding, and in addition to that, he has to have practical sense, business sense, persistence and endurance, that sometimes, we think lawyers can get along without."

"If I were advising young men who had no predilection in favor of any profession, I should advise them to become farmers."

Sailor's Embroidered Map.

A. Henry Peterson, of the local office of the United States shipping commissioner's department, has hanging on his office wall a map of Alaska, which is something of a curiosity. Like most sailors of the old school, Peterson is a handy man with the needle, and in the spare time at his disposal it took him ten months to make the map. It is all of silk embroidery, and nearly 500 skeins of silk thread were used in its manufacture. The different divisions of country are done in different colored silk, and all the names are worked in. The map is complete in detail.—Seattle Post-Intelligence.

BY THE FIRELIGHT'S GLOW.

Shadows deepen as night shuts down Over the farmhouse, small and brown; Wind-swept vanguard for fires that glow Within, and temper the gales that blow. Cherry faces and hearts atune, Like lit of bird on a day in June, Can make that hearthstone a haven blest.

Where weary toilers may safely rest.

There in the firelight's flickering The old folks muse and the children dream.

For hope and memory are torches bright, And age and youth by their witching light.

Relieve the past, make the future glow With pictures rare which tae embers show.

And side by side, from the storm shut in, Both dream, or muse on the night-have-been.

The tick of the clock and the cat's low purr.

The snapping embers' hurrying whirl Up the chimney wide down the storm's wild din.

And tell of comfort and warmth within.

Then howl, ye blast! and ye tempests, rage!

No war so fierce that your minions wage, No foe's fire can quench, nor diapel the glow.

That brightens those visions of long ago.
